

I am totally opposed to Cellular use on airplanes. Telephone conversations should be construed as private. Imagine a planeload of passengers on a typical aircraft and everyone on their cell at once. Now imagine an emergency situation in which the flight crew need to dispatch information in a timely manner to the passengers. I wonder how many people would interrupt their conversations and pay attention. Working in the airline industry, I find people do not pay attention to even the slightest information with reference to boarding announcements, etc. Half the time passengers do not even know what plane they are attempting to board. In my opinion, allowing cell use on board the aircraft would be detrimental and clearly an infringement on another's right to privacy.
